

The want of a suitable book as an aid to intending Communicants is one that has been often felt by the Christian pastor and the earnest Church member. Much indeed has been written on the subject of the Lord's Supper, from which the followers of Jesus may derive great spiritual good. Still the desirableness of a Compendium, condensed yet sufficiently full, seems to exist. To what extent the author of the following work has been successful in supplying what he believes lacking, he does not venture even to suppose. The conviction of its being required, led him, some years ago, to attempt to supply it. In doing so, he has kept in view the importance of comprehensiveness and conciseness. Circumstances have prevented him from submitting it to the Christian public till now. As it is only the devout Communicant that can be acceptable to the Master of the sacred festival, the writer has sincerely sought to cherish in the reader a devotional spirit.
