

Excerpt from China and Her People, Vol. 1 of 2: Being the Observations, Reminiscences, and Conclusions of an American Diplomat
The career of the late Col. Charles Denby in the Far East covered one of the most interesting and important eras in the history of civilization in that region of the world. That a man known not at all to the country as a whole and with no other distinction than that of the commander of an Indiana regiment in the Civil War should, without previous diplomatic training, be able so to conduct his office as United States Minister to China that he was continued there through three administrations and part of a fourth, at a time when politics was at its bitterest, is one of the most remarkable facts in our diplomatic history. It is plain that this man who was so honoured was a very able and valuable public servant and that his ministry won renown and honour to America and Americans.
