For decades, neuroscientists and physicians have tried to get to the bottom of the age-old mystery of post-traumatic stress disorder, to explain. A cognitive model of anxiety suggests that anxiety is associated with appraisals of danger; anxiety sufferers become preoccupied with danger and their perceived inability to cope. In , Horowitz³ described a cognitive-processing theory of PTSD that drew on information processing work and psychodynamic theory. criteria, prevalence, and presentation of patients with PTSD in primary care. The purpose of this article is to review current literature regarding theory, etiology. Post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD) is one of the few mental disorders in which the cause is readily identifiable. In this article, we review the new Diagnost. This can result in a complex and chronic dissociative subtype of post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD) that, in turn, may be accompanied by a sense of.
