

Fundamentals of painting It never hurts to talk about the fundamentals because thats all this painting is that Ive ever . . . I never got any further than the fundamentals, and I do everything but just some very basic stuff. You can find these brushes as this lady brought here - - you can buy this in any hardware store in America. And I mean every little hamlet you ever go into. Theyre the ones laying on a tray as you go out the door. Theyre China bristle brushes and theyre fifty cents, a dollar, dollar-and-a-half. By far, the nicest ones you can buy, dont think to spend more money and get a real house painters brush, theyre no good, theyre too long and there are too many bristles in them. They just dont work. And nylon is terrible or polyester. They last forever. Ive had some about four years. The biggest size they sell for about two-fifty or two dollars or something like that. And theyre wonderful. You can also buy them in an art supply store, youll pay about five, six or ten dollars if you want to, but believe me these are the ones. I do tonal painting. I cover the surface first cause I cant face that white canvas. If you paint every day like I do, you get up at six in the morning and heres this big dry white canvas facing you. Its like, oh my God, you know. And you feel like, I gotta fill that whole thing in now with a drawing and paints and colors. So you put that tone on and right away youre into something. Youre already sort of starting something.
