He also wrote widely on true crime, mysticism and the paranormal. Wilson called his philosophy new existentialism or phenomenological existentialism, and maintained his life work that of a philosopher, and (his) purpose to create a new and optimistic existentialism. Howard F. Dossor writes: Wilson constitutes one of the most significant challenges to twentieth-century critics. It seems most likely that critics analyzing his work in the middle of the twenty-first century, will be puzzled that his contemporaries paid such inadequate attention to him.
