Excerpt: ... Ratcliffe Society. A Society bearing this name has lately been established at Oxford, for the encouragement of the pursuit of Natural History, especially among the junior portion of the University. Its objects, should it prosper, are to establish a library and museum, for the use of its members. Any further particulars will be gladly communicated, on application to--Philip H. Newnham; Wadham College. Note on a supposed Thalassicola.--While becalmed off Cape Cormachiti, on the north coast of Cyprus, on September 3, 1849, I observed the sea all around to be studded with myriads of minute gelatinous looking bodies, appearing from the surface to the depth of from four feet to a fathom. Again on September 26, we sailed through many miles of them in the Gulf of Adalia; and I observed them in great numbers, a third time, off the north end of Rhodes, about ten days later. From their general appearance I took them to be spawn; but after reading a paper by Mr. Huxley, in the number of the Annals and Magazine of Natural History for December, 1851, I think that these bodies must be closely allied to, if not identical with his new Zoophyte, Thalassicola. Their general structure exactly corresponds with his description, viz., minute, spherical, spheroidal, or oval bodies imbedded in a gelatinous substance. Under the microscope also, these minute bodies seemed to be all cells of various sizes, the larger being distinctly seen to be nucleated: under a higher power, the nuclei exhibited nucleoli. But while thus agreeing in structure with his animal, they showed some external differences, of however comparatively slight importance. That is, they were generally more elongated than those he describes, and the external membrane was frequently constricted in places, causi...
