

Undressing Infidelity is a fascinating, steamy and compelling book that takes you beyond the cold taboo statistics of divorce and infidelity and into the everyday lives of married women who are having extramarital affairs. Who are these women? They are your neighbours, your friends, your co-workers. They go to your gym. They shop at your supermarket. They are the women you see everyday who seem to have it all. So why are they cheating? Statistics tell us that 65 percent of married women cheat - but what does that really mean? Here the author has uncovered the truth behind the numbers by doing what no one has ever done before - listening to them. She sat down one to one with more than one hundred and fifty women, all of whom shared the intimate secrets of their affairs. What tempts women to cheat? And when they do, how do they keep their marriages intact? Or do they? What about the children? And even if no one finds out, how do they face themselves in the mirror in the morning? In this book the author not only reveals the fascinating results of her research, she also provides an up-close-and-personal look at the most telling stories she encountered. She takes you deep inside the marriages and affairs of 12 fascinating women who chose to cheat. Told in their own words, these stories weave a surprising and compelling tapestry of love, sex and cheating loyalties in today's marriages.
