

Insights by a leading practitioner into the increasingly important but little-known field of public diplomacy. John Williams was political editor of the Daily Mirror before becoming Head of News at the UK's Foreign and Commonwealth Office. He advised successive Foreign Secretaries Robin Cook, Jack Straw and Margaret Beckett on how to shape public opinion in other countries to further Britain's international objectives. Here he draws on his unique experience and involvement in key international issues such as Israel-Palestine and Kashmir to explain how public diplomacy works, what it can achieve and its limitations.
